What are Reuters Newsmakers?

We Create a Stage Where News is Made

Reuters Newsmakers are discussion forums that bring together top global experts, CEOs, politicians and thought leaders in front of a live and virtual audience. They are currently taking place virtually.

The Format and the Forum are Never Quite the Same

Newsmakers can feature interviews or panel discussions, and usually conclude with audience question-and-answer sessions. They break news of interest to both local and global audiences, generate significant press coverage, and bring the most prominent figures and journalists together on the Reuters stage.

Providing Knowledge in Real Time

Newsmakers provide opportunities to discuss and debate the world's most pressing issues, in real time. Creating this forum for conversation leads to thought-provoking discourse.

Who Can Attend, and What Takes Place?

We Invite Influential Figures into the Audience

Here, the audience is as important as the speakers. In attendance are luminaries from the worlds of business and finance, law, science, media, politics, government and the arts. They also represent our network of Reuters partners, clients, media outlets and watchdogs.

Watch and Participate Online

Everyone is invited via multimedia coverage on Reuters.com and a coordinated presence across social media platforms. Global audiences can join the industry experts, influencers and Reuters editorial leaders in attendance by viewing the events on Reuters.com.

Expect Breadth and Expertise

Newsmakers drive the global news agenda and illuminate the key discussion topics and major themes of the day. They provide audiences with intelligent information in the fields of politics, business and general news. The breadth of topics reaches as far and wide as Reuters international news network.

Reuters Editorial Leaders Moderate Every Newsmaker

Reuters renowned editorial leaders such as Reuters Editor-in-Chief Stephen J. Adler, Reuters Editor-at-Large Sir Harold Evans, Reuters Global Managing Editor Alessandra Galloni and Reuters Editor-at-Large Axel Threlfall moderate each Newsmaker event—setting the stage for news to be made.
